NOTE.

THE origin of this Library of Reproductions of European Pictures and Drawings of all Schools and Periods from the 12th century onwards was a general interest in Art, and in Painting in particular. But the idea developed as the want of some central and comprehensive storehouse for easy and rapid reference and research asserted itself. Much unnecessary time was and is lost by scholars, critics, writers, collectors, dealers and, indeed, all those who in their various ways are concerned with painting, owing to the available material being, for this special purpose of speedy reference, scattered and to a great extent unorganised. A busy professional life, which left less time than could have been wished for these interests, made the need of some such means appear all the greater. The project involved two main aims: first, completeness as far as possible both in the painters represented and in the individual works of each; and, second, such a systematic method of arrangement of the material as a dictionary affords. As but a small part of this available material is to be obtained in the form of loose photographs, and by far the greater part exclusively in that of illustrations to books and catalogues, this last aim has been achieved only by dissecting ruthlessly and consistently all illustrated books, periodicals and catalogues of every description, and arranging each illustration under the heading of the particular artist. Thus alone can every man's complete production be seen immediately, all together and without reference elsewhere.

Where indeed can any one in this country interested in the history of painting refer to a mass of illustrations on both general and special subjects with a minimum of time and labour? Some are engaged on the preparation of catalogues of public or private collections, others wish to study the work of a whole School, others the production of a particular painter or of a group of his pupils, or some special period, subject or influence requiring a considerable accumulation of material. Many, again, wish to see the photograph of some definite picture or drawing, whether for the purpose of identification or comparison, or for discovering cases of alternative versions, replicas, copies or variants. The experience of many years shows that what is most in request is the rapid review of a large number of reproductions rather than the minuté study of one or two. Text books and biographies are, of course, useful, but even the most modern and extensively illustrated are of necessity incomplete owing to limitations of space, or become so as new discoveries are made, while thousands of painters of interest have produced so little or are in themselves of such minor importance as not to justify their being made the subjects of individual publications.

Not even in our central Museums and Libraries is there any great Corpus Pictorum or concentration of reproductions of pictorial art which claims approximate completeness and is, at the same time, so arranged that the whole of it is available for immediate and direct reference under the name of each painter. These marvellous collections, the result of many years of patient and skilful acquisition, will always remain the final resort of serious students and researchers, and their value cannot be over-estimated; but their vast resources and contents have, inevitably in the circumstances, been ordered and disposed on a different basis, and one involving necessary but far-reaching limitations in the matter of quick and easy reference.

Every public Library feels bound to retain all books and publications containing illustrations intact in their original and complete form, and cannot for this reason dissect and arrange their contents, as has been done here, by grouping each reproduction under the artist in question. In consequence reproductions of the work of any given painter may have to be sought, according to their references, in a dozen books or a hundred catalogues or periodicals of every date and size scattered throughout the library shelves. The Print Room at the British Museum does not concern itself primarily with paintings as such at all, and, as regards its superb collection of prints and drawings, adopts for the most part the practice followed by the Victoria and Albert Museum in its splendid Art-Library of retaining books and publications complete, and of relying on book or catalogue references to each individual work. The scope of the National Portrait Gallery Library is defined by its name. In Paris, the Bibliothèque Nationale and the Bibliothèque des Arts Decoratifs have only to a limited extent adopted the principle of dissection and rearrangement, for the most part under subject headings and iconographically, while in the unrivalled Art-Library founded by M. Doucet, and now the property of the University of Paris, each volume and catalogue is preserved intact. Such private collections as have adopted the system of breaking up and arranging under the name of the artist, like that of Sir Martin Conway in England, to which I am glad to refer with admiration, as also those of Mr. Berenson in Italy (Italian painting to the sixteenth century), of Dr. de Groot in Holland (Dutch painting to the seventeenth century) and of Dr. Friedlaender in Germany (Primitives), are deliberately restricted in the scope or period covered and do not concern themselves with modern painting, while others, owing to their having been undertaken later, are necessarily less comprehensive.

What has been attempted, therefore, is to form, after the analogy of the great Oxford Dictionary of the English Language, a kind of Murray's Dictionary of Pictures and Drawings, by concentrating and bringing together reproductions of, as nearly as may be, the whole body of European painting and drawing, and arranging it as a Dictionary in the manner most convenient for easy reference. As a Dictionary it has, accordingly, to include not only what is most interesting and important, and not only the work of the great but also that of the little Masters, many of them of quite secondary consideration, yet playing some part in their time, and as such contributing to the general history of the painter's craft. It is in such material that writers of art-history, biography and criticism dig and delve, unearthing what each requires for his purpose. To provide a proper background or foundation for art study, as well as to reconstruct those many lost artistic personalities which are perpetually half-emerging in baffling indistinctness, the mass of this material must be as large as possible. The starting point of some signed or dated example, of some drawing or sketch, can then be used as a clue from which to work.

The number of reproductions in the Library is about 150,000, representing the work of more than 8,000 individual painters and draughtsmen from both public and private collections throughout the world. They are contained in upwards of a thousand light boxes, each  $14 \times 12 \times 2\frac{3}{4}$  inches. The reproductions, where mounted, are laid on brown paper, as thin as is consistent with stiffness in the hand, generally  $12\frac{1}{2} \times 9\frac{1}{4}$  inches, but larger, if necessary, up to the limits of the box. The standard size chosen was based upon a maximum of economy of space and consequent convenience for reference. Where in excess of this the photographs are folded. The reproductions are of all kinds, preferably photographs, but embrace every variety of process block, collotype and photogravure, including examples in colour. No form of reproduction is rejected; even a postcard has its use in default of better. If possible, the reproduction chosen is from the original picture or drawing, but failing these resort has been had to reproductions of engravings after the original or even to engravings themselves. Original engravings, except portraits to some extent, and original etchings and lithographs altogether, are outside the scope of the Library. The reproductions are divided by being enclosed in covers, each cover labelled with the names and dates of the artist and the contents of the cover. Every reproduction bears the name of the painter, the subject of the picture and the name of its owner or the gallery to which it belongs. It may also bear the text of any descriptive or critical matter, and any notes of interest can be added upon it from time to time, such as deal with the size, the material on which it is painted (panel, canvas, paper, copper, etc.), its condition as regards repaints and restorations, tone and colour, dates and signatures, alternative attributions, the names of the collections through which it has passed, and literary, critical and bibliographical references. Where the same picture occurs more than once, say in successive sale catalogues, the reproductions are fastened together so as to form its pedigree and history.

The scope of the Library will have been made clear from what appears above. It aims at completeness, and therefore at including every painter and draughtsman of any repute, even temporary or local, working up to about the middle of the nineteenth century. In the case of more recent painting the output is so vast that it is impossible to represent it with the same fullness, though some of the men of to-day will assuredly be the old masters of the future. It has been necessary, therefore, to represent them in part only, selecting such names as are either represented in their own national collections or else seem, as a matter of opinion, most deserving of inclusion, or, finally, are such as are frequently asked for by those who use the Library. If this eclecticism results, as it must, in undeserved omissions, one can but plead that it will be easy to make them good hereafter. By far the greater part of what has been brought together is the work of men who were born before 1800, only about twenty per cent. having been born after that date.

The object so much insisted upon, ease and rapidity of reference, depends upon the arrangement of the reproductions.

The Library catalogues itself. Its primary classification is under Schools:—British, including American (U.S.A.), Danish, Dutch, Flemish, French, German (under which for convenience and for the present are grouped Austrian, Hungarian and German-Swiss), Greek (modern), Italian, Norwegian, Portuguese, Russian, Spanish and Swedish.

For the use of those who are uncertain as to the School or date of any painter, and to indicate the names of the artists whose works are represented in the Library, the alphabetical Catalogue of painters following this Note has been prepared, giving in every case where known the full name, dates and School. Under their respective Schools all the painters represented in the Library are arranged alphabetically. Where a man is known under several names, the more usual nomenclature has been followed, and cross-references to alternative names will be found in the Catalogue. In cases where the School itself is doubtful or disputable the choice has always been based upon authority. The numerous cases of erroneous or doubtful attributions have been met by placing the reproduction under the name officially given to it so that it can always be traced, but adding duplicate reproductions and cross-references under the correct or alternative names.

The secondary classification is by Subject, and this constitutes a further distinctive feature of the Library. On its maintenance depends the whole system of rapid reference. Subject is, surely, the most acceptable basis of arrangement. Chronology can never take its place, for it is in many cases either unknown or open to question. Only by arranging the reproductions under this system of Subject is it possible to subdivide sufficiently, and in the search for a particular picture subdivision and therefore elimination are the essence of rapid work, for, as in the case of using a Dictionary, the student's object is to turn over as few pages as possible. The nature of the subdivisions depends, of course, on the character of the subjects peculiar to the painter in each case, but it includes the following where suitable :—

Old Testament
 Apocrypha
 New Testament
 Saints Historical Mythological
 Allegorical
 Genre
 Still Life
 Fruit and Flowers
 Animals
 Landscape and Seascape
 Architecture
 Portraits
 Drawings (these being again subdivided under subjects as above).

In the case of the most prolific Masters, many of these subdivisions are further broken up, e.g., the portraits are divided into those of Men, Women, Children and Groups. Under Old and New Testament and Apocrypha the pictures are arranged according to their Biblical order, so that, even in the case of such a subdivision, the search for any particular picture is reduced to the absolute minimum. Works which cannot be identified with any particular painter will be found under the heading of their School, e.g., British or French School, Florentine, Umbrian or Venetian School, etc. In the case of the numerous portraits of the British School which have been painted by unknown artists, but where the sitters can be identified, they are arranged as a special group and alphabetically, according to the name of the sitter.

The saving of time involved by this arrangement according to subject may be illustrated by the case of so prolific a Master as Rubens. The Library contains some 1,500 reproductions of pictures and drawings by or attributed to him and, were such a mass of material undigested and uncoördinated, to find any particular picture would take no little time. Accordingly Rubens's work is divided under the following headings:—Old Testament and New Testament, each subject in Biblical order, Madonnas, Saints (subdivided into male and female), Historical, Mythological (these again arranged alphabetically according to the subject of the picture), Allegorical, Genre, Hunting scenes, Landscapes, Triumphal Arches, The Medici and Henri IV. series, the Whitehall Frescoes and Portraits, divided into male and female and again subdivided according as they are full lengths, etc. The drawings are similarly classified upon a subject basis. In consequence the work of Rubens is broken up into some fifty-three sections, each of easily manageable proportions, so that to find any particular picture should not occupy more than a few seconds.

It is hoped that some day it will be possible to prepare a subject index of Hagiological, Historical, Classical and Mythological subjects on the lines on which Mr. Salomon Reinach has already been working with so much success.

One note of warning to the inexperienced may not be superfluous. A photograph, even the best, may be misleading at least as to the artistic qualities of the original. It may libel, but it may also flatter.

The materials used in forming the Library have been many and various. The photographs of Alinari, Anderson and Brogi in Italy, of Hanfstaengl and Bruckmann in Germany and of Braun & Cie. in France, form a nucleus in the case of public galleries, museums and churches. Such photographers, however, concern themselves for the most part with public or semi-public collections, while experience shows that reference to pictures in private hands is at least as much in demand. For these the most valuable sources are the illustrated catalogues of sales by auction, of which some thousands have been brought together, those prepared on the Continent with their critical texts being the most useful. In every case the illustrations are removed and arranged under the painter in question. So too with the illustrated catalogues prepared by the owners of important private collections, practically all of which, from the volumes of the Pierpont Morgan Collection to those of more modest dimensions, have been dissected, and their illustrations and relevant text included. The illustrated catalogues of loan exhibitions at the Burlington Fine Arts Club and at the great exhibition centres in London, Paris, Brussels, Berlin, Vienna, Madrid and New York have been systematically collected. Most of the European and American Art periodicals also contribute an increasing number of reproductions, as do illustrated biographies and text books of all descriptions. Many pictures not elsewhere reproduced have been specially photographed.

A collection of which the scope is so wide can necessarily never be complete. Work upon it never ceases, for new books and catalogues are constantly appearing, discoveries of new pictures are being made daily; daily, too, pictures not hitherto photographed are being reproduced. All these need to be incorporated. Meanwhile attributions are frequently shifting and new names appearing, and much critical work is required to keep pace with the results of recent research. Pictures again are continually changing hands, and their pedigrees and provenance need to be kept up to date.

The Library is open for consultation by serious students of Art. It is to the younger generation of art-lovers that the nation must look for a succession of gallery directors, critics and art historians. A field rich in problems and ripe for scholarly research awaits them. Every amateur and collector as well as every individual engaged professionally with pictures and drawings, might make some branch or other of this vast subject his own special study, and win his spurs in exploring it. Yet there would always be room for others.

Finally, a few words of sincere thanks are due to all those who have given their help in many ways over the twenty years or so that the Library has been in course of formation. Many who have found it helpful to themselves have reciprocated in the kindest possible way by contributing new and interesting catalogues, photographs and reproductions of every kind, thereby adding to its future usefulness.

DIRECTIONS FOR USE OF THE LIBRARY.

1. The most convenient method of using the boxes is to turn over the covers to the left into the lid until the painter required is found.

2. When using the contents of a cover, the cover should be opened to the right and the reproductions turned over to the left until finished with, when they should be allowed to fall back to the right into the cover, which should then be closed to the left. Great inconvenience is caused where reproductions are left outside the cover to which they belong.

3. It is particularly requested that the order of the covers in the boxes and of the reproductions in the covers be not changed.

4. Visitors are requested to make notes, corrections or suggestions, not upon the reproductions, but upon the slips provided for the purpose.
